Guido Frick b.1947

Guido Frick received his art education in Europe as well as the United States. After years of studying with Professor Karel Hodr, one of Europe's important impressionists, Guido joined the Bongart School of Art in California, Idaho in the early 80's and calls Sergei Bongart his 'beloved and highly respected teacher'. Returning to Europe his reputation as a painter grew and his work was also published in Art books. At this time he won the "Prix de Salon, Fontainbleau, Paris".

Guido paints completely plein-air including his still life subjects. This accounts for the freshness and spontaneity which shows in his vigorous brushwork and colour harmonies.

Speaking of the painting process Guido says, "If you don't let your feelings come out while painting, nothing will happen on your canvas. The paintings should mirror your personality. Be your self then your painting gets soul, heart and power".
